Internet Filtering Accuracy Review
(Report Submitted October 15, 2001)

Regarding
AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION, et al., v. UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, et al.,
and
MULTNOMAH COUNTY PUBLIC LIBRARY, et al., v. UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, et al.

1. Introduction

Certus Consulting Group has been asked to review the effectiveness and accuracy of Internet filtering software currently in use at public libraries in Greenville, South Carolina, Tacoma, Washington, and Westerville, Ohio. Mr. Cory Finnell, a member of Certus Consulting Group LLC, oversaw all aspects of the review, and Certus was compensated for the analysis at the rate of $200 per hour for Mr. Finnell's time, $100 per hour for computer program specialist time, and $70 per hour for website review staff time. Certus relied on a number of information sources to form the opinions stated in this report, including Internet usage data collected from Libraries, Library Internet Acceptable Use Policies, Internet filtering company product description data, and conversations with Library personnel. It is our understanding that the three library systems have purchased and implemented Internet filtering software in order to facilitate the enforcement of their respective acceptable Internet use policies. This report summarizes our findings with respect to the accuracy of the Internet filtering products in use at these three libraries.

Internet filtering products are designed to prevent access to selected web sites based on site content. Filtering products are combinations of computer software code and physical computing devices that operate as gateways between computer users and the Internet. In a filtered network environment, each site requested by a computer user is checked against a categorized database of Internet sites. If the requested site is flagged as a block site, the request for the content is denied. If it is not flagged as a block site, the content is collected and delivered to the computer user. Administrators of the filtering software can determine and select which categories to block. Most filters also allow administrators to enter manual overrides to allow access to sites that would otherwise be blocked or to deny access to sites that would otherwise be allowed. Most also have built-in feedback mechanisms that encourage computer users to submit sites that they think should either be blocked or unblocked.

Filtering companies populate their category databases using a variety of technologies and processes and they work to differentiate themselves based on the number of sites categorized, the number of different categories, and the accuracy of the categorization process. Many utilize some form of human review to categorize sites and most maintain numerous categories such as Pornography, Illegal, Entertainment, News and others. It is not uncommon for the number of categorized sites to run into the millions. Most allow the customer to determine which of the categories to filter and which to allow.

The Internet is a dynamic environment. The content of individual sites can change quickly and many sites are difficult to categorize because individual pages within sites contain vastly different content. For instance, the Internet site www.geocities.com actually contains hundreds if not thousands of individual pages and the content of individual pages. One day a page might contain information about knitting and the next it might contain pornography. Therefore the filtering databases are dynamic and change each time a new site is entered or a site is re-categorized. Therefore, the filtering companies must strike the balance between assigning appropriate category labels to sites and being too liberal in their application. Without this balance, their customers will experience an unacceptable level of under blocking or over blocking.

2. Data Sources

In addition to filtering, most filters have the capability to log information about individual web site requests including whether or not the request was blocked. To test the over and under block rates of filters, Internet usage logs were collected from three separate library systems. Analysis of actual usage data is desirable because it reflects how people actually interact with the product in the field. Tests based on randomly generated lists of active web sites are less accurate because they do not necessarily represent sites that are actively sought out by Internet users.

Data was available from the Tacoma, Washington, Westerville, Ohio, and Greenville, South Carolina library systems. Because the Internet is so dynamic and content changes frequently, Certus sought to acquire recently generated log file data. However, because of the possibility that the events of September 11, 2001 significantly altered Internet browsing habits, log files for the entire month of August were requested from each library.

The library system in Tacoma, Washington uses the Cyber-Patrol filtering product in conjunction with a custom “Webfoot” Internet browser that filters all graphical images from sites categorized by Cyber-Patrol as containing Adult content. The Tacoma library system only logs information about sites that were blocked. Information on all sites blocked during the month of August was collected and analyzed.

The library system in Westerville, Ohio uses the Websense filtering product on a Cache-Flow Internet Appliance. The Cache-Flow Appliance logs information on both blocked sites and non-blocked sites. The Appliance writes log file data to a set of Internet usage logs. When the usage logs reach a predetermined size, the Appliance writes over them with new usage logs. Because of this, August usage logs were not available. The logs that were available were for the period October 1, 2001 through October 3, 2001. These logs were collected and analyzed.

The library system in Greenville, South Carolina uses N2H2's filtering product and logs both blocked and unblocked sites. The log files are voluminous and many contain over 500,000 records for a single day. Because of the volume, Certus limited the analysis of the Greenville logs to the period August 2, 2001 through August 15, 2001.

It is important to point out that all three libraries from which the data was collected filter content. Therefore it is likely that patrons modify their Internet behavior and request fewer potentially blocked sites than they otherwise would. Even so, in these three filtered environments, for the test period, patrons made over 38,000 requests for pages that were blocked.

3. Methodology

To test for over blocking, data pertaining to each blocked was extracted from the usage logs for each of the three filtering products. This is possible by identifying the field within each log file that indicates whether or not a site was blocked. The host, or source of content, was then determined for each blocked site. For example, www.whitehouse.gov/infocus is a page within the host www.whitehouse.gov. Each host was then reviewed by a team of human reviewers to determine if the content of the host was consistent with the filtering rule in place for each library. For instance, the Tacoma library filters all images from sites categorized by Cyber-Patrol to contain Adult content. Therefore, each Tacoma site blocked was compared to Cyber-Patrol's criteria for categorizing a site as an Adult content site. If the content of a host and the pages within the host were considered consistent with the filtering product's rule for categorizing a site into a category blocked by the library, it was considered an accurate block. If the content of the host was inconsistent with the filter's criteria, then the individual pages blocked within the host were sampled and reviewed. If the sampled block page was inconsistent with the filter's criteria, it was considered an inaccurate block. When possible, blocks considered inaccurate were compared to current versions of the filtering product's category database to account for the possibility that the web site content had changed since the time the data was collected. If the site was correctly categorized in the current version of a product's database, that fact was noted and accounted for in separate tests.

The Greenville and Westerville logs contain information on non blocked sites therefore it was possible to test for under blocking of the Websense and N2H2 products. To do so, random samples of accessed sites were selected from the logs for each site. The host of each page was determined and reviewed by a team of human reviewers. If the content of the host and sampled pages within the host did not contain content consistent with the filtering criteria, it was considered an accurate access. If the host and or sampled pages within the host contained content consistent with the filtering criteria, it was considered an inaccurate access. Sites considered inaccurate accesses were compared to the current version of the filter product's database to account for the possibility that the web site content had changed since the time the data was collected. If the site was correctly categorized in the current version of the database, that fact was noted and accounted for in separate tests.

Search engines posed a challenge for categorizing the accuracy and inaccuracy of blocks. Some filters use key word and other techniques to handle search term requests and search term results. Without full access to a filtering company's database, keyword block lists, and manual override lists, it is difficult to characterize the accuracy of search engine blocks. For example, a search term request for “_?AL” was blocked by the Tacoma filtering criteria which resulted in a count against the Cyber-Patrol filter for its handling of www.excite.com.

4. Results

The results for both the over and under blocking tests are summarized in Attachment A. The actual hosts reviewed and the results of the review are presented in Attachments B through F.

It was possible to review 836 of the unique hosts blocked by the Cyber-Patrol product. It was determined that 783 of those blocks were accurate and that 53 were inaccurate. The estimated error rate for the Cyber-Patrol product was therefore estimated to be 6.34% and the true error rate was estimated with 95% confidence to lie within the range of 4.69% to 7.99%. Tacoma uses a proprietary Internet browser that only blocks images contained on pages flagged by Cyber-Patrol for filtering. Therefore, in the Tacoma library, all text was returned to the computer user even for the sites flagged for blocking by Cyber-Patrol. In this sense, the over blocking error rate in Tacoma was lower than what is reported here. Also, it was not possible to acquire the manual override list from the Tacoma library. Therefore, to the extent that manual overrides were the source of error or the source of more accurate blocking, the actual error rate is different than what is reported here.

Certus reviewed 344 unique hosts from the Websense logs and found 316 to be accurately categorized. The estimated error rate was equal to 8.14% with a 95% confidence interval ranging from 5.25% to 11.03%. Four blocked sites considered inaccurate are correctly categorized in the current version of the Websense category database. Taking these four errors into account reduces the estimated error rate to 6.69% with a 95% confidence interval of 4.05% to 9.33%. It was not possible to acquire the manual override list from the Westerville library. Therefore, to the extent that manual overrides were the source of error or the source of more accurate blocking, the actual error rate is different than what is reported here.

Certus also reviewed 1,928 hosts from the N2H2 product and found 157 of the 1,928 hosts to have been inaccurately filtered resulting in an estimated error rate of 8.14% with a 95% confidence interval ranging from 6.92% to 9.36%. However, 68 of the 157 sites considered inaccurate, are correctly categorized in the current version of the N2H2 filtering database. Taking these 68 sites into account reduces the estimated error rate to 4.62% with a 95% confidence interval range of 3.68% to 5.55%. It was not possible to acquire the manual override list from the Greenville library. Therefore, to the extent that manual overrides were the source of error or the source of more accurate blocking, the actual error rate is different than what is reported here.

- Notes: 1. It is my understanding that the Tacoma Library filters all urls categorized as Adult in the Cyber-Patrol category database. Cyber-Patrol's description of Adult content was used to categorize sites for the above analysis.
2. The Westerville Library runs the WebSense filtering product on a Cache-Flow appliance. It is my understanding that the library filters all urls categorized as Adult in the WebSense category database including all sub-categories of the Adult category. WebSense's description of Adult content was used to categorize sites for the above analysis.
3. The sites blocked and the sites sampled for "Under Blocking" were checked against WebSense's published filtering criteria. To account for the possibility that site content or filtering database content could have changed since the time the log data was generated, each site that contained content inconsistent with the intended performance of the filter were checked against the current WebSense database which is available on the Internet.
4. It is my understanding that the Greenville Library filters all urls categorized as Adult, Chat, Illegal, Nudity, Pornography, Tasteless, and Sex in the N2H2 category database. N2H2's descriptions of these categories was used to categorize sites for the above analysis.
5. The sites blocked and the sites sampled for "Under Blocking" were checked against N2H2's published filtering criteria. To account for the possibility that site content or filtering database content could have changed since the time the log data was generated, each site that contained content inconsistent with the intended performance of the filter were checked against the current N2H2 database which is available on the Internet.

Note: 1. Sites that were considered to have inaccurately passed through the filter were checked against the current version of Websense's database which is available on the Internet at www.websense.com. If the site was properly categorized in the current database, and fell into a category that would have been blocked by the Westerville Library, the "Inaccurate in Current Database" column was set equal to 0.

Notes: 1. The N2H2 product is set to block multiple categories. The key for the above analysis is A=Adult, C=Chat, I=Illegal, N=Nudity, P=Pornography, S=Sex, and T=Tasteless.
2. Sites that were considered to have been inaccurately filtered were checked against the current version of N2H2's database which is available on the Internet at www.n2h2.com. If the site was properly categorized in the current database, and fell into a category that would have been blocked
